COLBY NELSON

I grew up as a kid collecting toys and drawing characters from cereal boxes onto paper with pens and any other way to jot down my ideas. Along with those things and being outside looking around gave me a lot of time to realize how great it is to have an expressive mind. I draw to inspire others and create things to give my emotions away for others to feel through my art. My mission is to infuse them with enough imagination to go home and create their own world of make believe, reality, and find their inner light to guide them to all their happiness. I will draw forever and when you see my art, you will know who made it. I put my mind, body, and soul into whatever I create.

Much light and love to all of you.

KAREN PERRY-ANDERSON

Making art is a meditative way for me to give form to thoughts. I don't like to plan and think very long on drawn images as they are usually the basis of an incarnation to another media. With the fallout of this Spring from the pandemic, I like to think there are positive changes coming to how the world views people's time and the earth's resources.

I currently teach at an alternative high school learning program called Youth Educational Services (Y.E.S) located on the Minnesota State University Moorhead campus, located in Moorhead, Minnesota. I am a Social Justice Artist.

Thanks to all of our incredible contributing artists and to Paul Ide and Cody Jacobson at Plains Art Museum for organizing this volume.
